Test One.

I am going to give you the instructions for this test. I shall introduce each part of the test and give you time to look at the questions. At the start of each piece you will hear this sound:

tone

You will hear each piece twice.

Remember, while you are listening, write your answers on the question paper. You will have five minutes at the end of the test to copy your answers onto the separate answer sheet.

There will now be a pause. Please ask any questions now, because you must not speak during the test.

[pause]

Now open your question paper and look at Part One.

[pause]

PART 1

You will hear people talking in eight different situations. For questions 1 to 8, choose the best answer (A, B or C).

Question 1

You hear a TV presenter talking about his style of interviewing.

[pause]

tone

Man: I'm sometimes accused of being a soft interviewer – of not pushing my guests hard enough for an answer. But I'd say people who think that don't really understand how interviewing works. I think by being respectful, you're much more likely to get an interesting and thoughtful response. The job isn't to ask straightforward questions that the interviewee has prepared the answer to. It's to get the person in the studio to say the most interesting thing that he or she can say about the big political topics of the day.

Question 2

You hear a famous chef talking about giving dinner parties at his home.

[pause]

tone

Man: I love giving dinner parties at home – even though I've already been cooking different dishes all day. It's still my favourite way to relax and I love having my friends round. It's always a good sign when you put the meal on the table and everyone goes quiet. People are just concentrating on the sights, smells and tastes of the food. There's nothing better. Then everyone starts chatting again. But for that one moment – it's just about the food. In your home, it doesn't matter how much noise you and your guests make or how much food you eat. You don't have to consider other people like you do in a restaurant.

Question 3

You hear two colleagues discussing the arrangements for a conference.

[pause]

tone

Man: The arrangements for the conference seem to be coming together very nicely, don't they, Linda?

Woman: We seem to have done alright, don't we? I've checked how many parking spaces there are outside the conference centre – just over five hundred, so I'm pleased about that. It's very easy to get to from the motorway.

Man: That's fine unless you're coming by public transport. The station's quite a way away.

Woman: Perhaps we should provide a minibus. I still think we made the right choice. Now, about the budget I suggested for refreshments and lunch. What do you think?

Man: I can't see anything wrong with it. Shall we go and ...

Question 4

You hear an actor talking about his acting career.

[pause]

tone

Man: You know, we all have to make a living, pay the bills and so on, and some of my acting friends have been forced to take on projects they would've preferred to have turned down. I've been very fortunate in that I've never been in the position of having to do something I didn't want to do. When I left drama school, unlike some of my fellow students, I went for theatre jobs over film ones. And that gave me a thorough grounding in the profession. The roles I've accepted have been very varied and have allowed me to show my acting ability. Of course, things may change – you never know.

Question 5 You hear a student telling a friend about her first day on a teacher-training course.

[pause]

tone

Man: So how'd it go?

Woman: Interesting. We learnt about body language. They got us to walk into the room one-by-one and introduce ourselves as if it was our first day with a new class. Then we watched a video of ourselves to analyse what sort of impression we'd made.

Man: I bet that was embarrassing.

Woman: Well it's given me something to work on actually cos I straightaway saw how some people have got a sort of natural authority, whereas others just looked self-conscious and awkward. Typically, I was somewhere in the middle. But you could see how it'd make a world of difference to what the kids thought of you.

Man: Right.

Question 6 You hear two colleagues talking about some work they are doing together.

[pause]

tone

Woman: Well, Pete, I think this project the boss gave us to do is going alright, isn't it?

Man: I don't know how we've managed to get so much done in such a short time!

Woman: Yeah, so many deadlines, but we've managed to meet every one!

Man: It's time-consuming, but actually less challenging than I'd expected it to be.

Woman: Yeah, though sometimes I think I'd rather be doing something I had to think about a bit more.

Man: Well I'm sure we'll be given something more like that next time around, when she sees how we've dealt with this.

Woman: Yeah, and it'd be good if we could work on our next project together, too.

Man: Yes, I'd like that.

Question 7 You hear a woman telling a friend about a visit to the Australian city of Sydney.

[pause]

tone

Man: How was your visit to Sydney?

Woman: I'd travelled so far from London, over twenty hours flying, that I was intent on making the absolute most of my time there. That meant checking out all the sights – the harbour, the amazing opera house, the museums. The style of buildings in some parts is quite old-fashioned and charming. I'd read about that, so I made a point of visiting the areas with lovely, leafy, low-rise streets. The climate can be a bit unpredictable, so I'd packed a raincoat in case of wet weather. I managed to avoid anything too bad... there were just a few showers. They're quite a relief in the heat actually.

Question 8 You hear a TV presenter talking about her new job.

[pause]

tone

Woman: I only started presenting the programme two months ago, but sometimes it feels like two years!

Man: How do you mean?

Woman: I'm already very much part of the team – the people I'm working with are really friendly – even more so than I'd expected.

Man: Were you given challenging assignments from day one?

Woman: Yes, and that approach really worked – I had to get on with it from the very first day. Everyone on the team's treated exactly the same, regardless of how long we've been there. I coped fine with it, and they haven't had any complaints about me – so that's a good sign.

Man: Absolutely!

That is the end of Part One.

Now turn to Part Two.

PART 2

You will hear a man called Martin Naseby giving a talk about a group trip he went on around some islands, paddling a small boat called a kayak. For questions 9 to 18, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase.

You now have forty-five seconds to look at Part Two.

[pause]

tone

My name's Martin and I'd like to tell you about my recent trip, a kayaking tour around islands off the coast of Croatia, in southern Europe.

I'd done a little kayaking before – paddling along in a small narrow boat for one or two people. But I knew I'd need to up my fitness levels before this trip, which would be physically tough. So I went running every day, and also started strength training at my gym. Without the guidance of my trainer, I wouldn't have had the muscle power to keep paddling! And the swimming I did every evening probably helped too.

Arriving at the Croatian coast, I joined the kayaking group on one of the ferries across to the main island. The stretch of sea seemed relatively quiet, but I did spot some speedboats roaring past on occasion and thought they could pose a threat to us kayakers. There were a few sailing boats, too, although they were safely anchored.

On the island, we met our guide, Karl. I was worried because the sky looked very grey that day, as if a storm was approaching, and the wind had apparently been strong before we'd got there. That'd subsided, luckily, as we were due to start kayaking the following day. But then the next morning, we awoke to thick fog! However, it quickly disappeared, just as Karl assured us it would.

So we were finally ready for our first kayaking trip. I thought the sea looked far from calm, so I'd been anticipating a bumpy trip. However, we were in double kayaks, which made the ride feel more stable than in a single. As it turned out, we did hit some rough water in our kayaks, but generally it was OK.

So, we headed out from the island, and Karl initially let us paddle around for a while to learn how to handle the kayaks, before heading into open water. Karl had mentioned he might take us diving, which I was looking forward to. But then I could see we were actually paddling towards some cliffs, and Karl asked us if we'd like to join him to do some climbing – which I hadn't expected! Most of the group, including me, just enjoyed the chance for some photography from our kayaks, but a few brave people did take part!

After that, we paddled around the cliffs and into a cave, invisible from the shore. It looked pretty similar to many I'd visited before, with mysterious, oddly-shaped stones inside, but there was also a strange blue light, an effect none of us will forget. It was apparently created by the sun's rays entering through a crack in the cave wall. Then we paddled out again and headed back.

On the second day, some of our group wanted to relax, so Karl dropped them at a beach with a restaurant, close to our accommodation. The rest of us headed for another island nearby. This island featured a truly magnificent high rock close to the shore, on top of which was a castle. It had once been used in a film, apparently, but it was all quite derelict now, so we couldn't go inside it.

Test 1 answer key

Finally, we paddled around a ring of other, smaller, islands. I'd already checked these out on a map the night before, and thought they resembled a necklace, from their position in the sea, so it was fascinating to actually see them. And we did manage to observe some wildlife – plenty of seabirds and some fish visible beneath the waves. The area's also home to some dolphins, but none of them chose to appear, sadly. However, we did spot some turtles, which made up for that.

We eventually arrived back on shore, to find Karl's assistant waiting with some photos of us in our kayaks. He'd also very thoughtfully brought us some cake to celebrate the end of the trip. There were some souvenirs to buy, too – so plenty to remind us of our great trip!

That is the end of Part Two.

Now turn to Part Three.

PART 3

You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about a rock concert they went to. For questions 19 to 23, choose from the list (A to H) what each speaker says about the concert. Use the letters only once. There are three extra letters which you do not need to use.

You now have thirty seconds to look at Part Three.

[pause]

tone

Speaker 1

I wasn't at all sure what the concert would be like, but some friends were going along, and as I'm a big rock music fan, I went too. It was going to be a completely new experience, after all, listening to a group I'd never heard of, although that did mean I couldn't sing along to anything they played, which I do love doing! It was the first time they'd played live on stage, and it was a pretty good concert, as it turned out, with all the usual dry ice and strobe lighting. And of course, loads of their fans were there, predictably – all sitting at the front!

[pause]

Speaker 2

The band playing at the concert was one of my favourites, and I'd been told their live performances were great, although the album I'd downloaded was cool too. Then I discovered my mate knew one of the sound crew, so that meant special privileges for us when we got there – including standing right at the side of the stage to watch the performance, so the musicians actually stopped and chatted to us on their way onstage! Amazing! There weren't so many people at the concert, but we still had the best view. The band played all their latest numbers, and included some I hadn't heard before – but we still all sang along!

[pause]

Speaker 3

I'd been to lots of concerts before, so I knew pretty much what to expect – big stage, some warm-up groups I hadn't seen before, all before the really famous band came on stage, when the fans would all start jumping around and screaming! In fact, the venue turned out to be smaller than I'd thought, but the atmosphere was still brilliant, and the laser light show and the flames on stage looked incredibly realistic – the most sensational I've ever seen. And the music was all our favourite stuff, too – all the things we'd got on albums – so we had a good time dancing to it!

[pause]

Speaker 4

I was in two minds whether to book for the concert as I knew I might be called away for work. I'd have been really disappointed if I'd missed it, though, as the band they'd lined up for the main performance was brilliant. Anyway, as it turned out I managed to get there, and I was really glad I did – I'd downloaded loads of the music we were going to hear, but what they played on stage was way beyond anything I'd listened to by them before. And the other fans watching obviously felt the same – they went wild! I could see the performance really well from where I was standing, too.

[pause]

Test 1 answer key

Speaker 5

My brother works as a lighting manager, so he helps to set everything up when bands play at local concert halls. Occasionally I get invited to watch from his box, but at the last concert I went to, he wasn't able to arrange that for me, which was a bit of a let-down. Anyway, I knew the band would be playing new songs from their latest album, which I'd just downloaded, so I just decided to stay at the back of the hall, enjoy the concert, and sing along. Then at the last minute, my brother got me a ticket for the front row – so I watched my favourite guitarist in comfort!

That is the end of Part Three.

Now turn to Part Four.

PART 4

You will hear an interview with a man called Richard Fisher, who is a museum curator, working with the museum's collections. For questions 24 to 30, choose the best answer (A, B or C).

You now have one minute to look at Part Four.

[pause]

tone

- Woman: I'm delighted to welcome Richard Fisher to our studio today to talk about his work as a museum curator – someone who works with the collections of exhibits in a museum. So Richard, why did you decide to do a course in museum studies?
- Man: I studied history at university, and after graduating, wondered what to do next. My tutors had encouraged me to do a post-graduate degree, but I wasn't sure what it should be in. Then it occurred to me that – as I'd always been intrigued by the past and how it could be displayed to people – it might be a good starting point in terms of a career.
- Woman: So you did the course, and then got a job in a museum. What does your work involve these days?
- Man: When I first started, I was responsible for the archaeological collection, and then became the senior curator, managing all the other curators. My role means I'm removed from dealing with the day-to-day running of collections and exhibitions – it's more strategic: making decisions about what exhibitions to have next, redevelopment of the museum buildings, and so on.
- Woman: What do you think are the main skills a museum curator needs?
- Man: Clearly, being able to choose objects in the collections is important, and in this respect forming relationships with other organisations, such as universities, matters. Academics have fantastic ideas and theories, and grasping these, and then trying to make them into something appealing and comprehensible for a general audience, is what marks the work of a really good curator.
- Woman: An exhibition at your museum won a prize recently in a national competition. What was it that made that exhibition special?
- Man: The original aim of the museum, over a hundred years ago, was to tell people about the world – to somehow bring the world to them via all the different and amazing objects on display. The collection in this exhibition comes from every continent and is very diverse. Therefore we told some of the histories of the objects and the lengths we went to to actually get hold of them for the exhibition, and that approach was what the judges really liked. It also gave us a chance to use our new state-of-the-art lighting system.
- Woman: Sounds great. ... Is there anything you don't enjoy so much about your job?
- Man: That isn't easy to answer – I mean I work with lots of different people who all have their own opinions on what should be done – the discussions we have are what makes the museum such an interesting place. I need that energy, because I'm always under pressure to complete one project by a particular date and then move straight on to the next – sometimes I'd like more time ... I do some travelling, too, on occasion, which wouldn't suit me if I had to do it more than once in a while.

Test 1 answer key

Woman: So is it a career choice you'd recommend to other people?

Man: To be perfectly honest, although it is a wonderful job to do, anyone wanting to go into museum curating should be aware that it's a very competitive field, even though salaries are hardly generous, and it can take a long time before your efforts are recognised. However, increasingly we're able to do things very differently to how they were done in the past, and that's one of the things that makes it so rewarding.

Woman: And finally, Richard, what advice can you give anyone who's hoping to apply for a job as a curator?

Man: Well, like anything, it's all about standing out from the crowd. So maybe a previous speciality like having experience of an archaeological dig in the area. Good communication skills are also important because you're often dealing with members of the public. I think, increasingly, the way things seem to be heading, museum bosses will be looking for people who have an understanding of budgets and cost management.

Woman: Richard, thank you very much.

[pause]

Now you will hear Part Four again.

[The recording is repeated.]

That is the end of Part Four.

There will now be a pause of five minutes for you to copy your answers onto the separate answer sheet. Be sure to follow the numbering of all the questions. I shall remind you when there is one minute left, so that you are sure to finish in time.

[pause – four minutes]

You have one more minute left.

[pause – one minute]

That is the end of the test. Please stop now. Your supervisor will now collect all the question papers and answer sheets.
