Test Four.

I am going to give you the instructions for this test. I shall introduce each part of the test and give you time to look at the questions. At the start of each piece you will hear this sound:

tone

You will hear each piece twice.

Remember, while you are listening, write your answers on the question paper. You will have five minutes at the end of the test to copy your answers onto the separate answer sheet.

There will now be a pause. Please ask any questions now, because you must not speak during the test.

[pause]

Now open your question paper and look at Part One.

[pause]

PART 1

You will hear people talking in eight different situations. For questions 1 to 8, choose the best answer (A, B or C).

Question 1

You hear a girl telling a friend about a radio programme she listened to.

[pause]

tone

Girl: My mum always has the radio on at home, and I don't usually get into the programmes she listens to but today was different.

Boy: Why was that?

Girl: It was a discussion programme where they'd got in some experts to debate various things ... political stuff ... but also bringing in psychology and science. It made for an interesting balance.

Boy: Right.

Girl: Anyway, I think I'll listen to the show again, 'cos it was so informative, and I was pretty impressed by how knowledgeable the speakers were. They discussed things I just hadn't been aware of. We live in such a fast-changing world.

Question 2

You hear a man telling a friend about coaching young football players.

[pause]

tone

Woman: How's the football coaching going?

Man: I love it – training's only once a week, for a couple of hours at the weekend, and because they're in a junior league for under tens, there are matches once a week on top of that. It'll be a while before we have any chance of winning a match, though! I'm sure they'll get there but it won't be easy: they're all quite sporty and love running around, but they do need to work on their skills. I'd like to feel I'm showing them that every member of the team counts, and that everyone deserves to be appreciated. Then I'll have achieved something.

Question 3 You hear a woman telling a friend about some photographs she's taken.

[pause]

tone

Woman: I've just been looking through all the photos I took while I was on holiday with my sister.

Man: Oh really? You always take loads, don't you? Were you pleased with them?

Woman: Well, yes and no. I mean, some turned out OK – not quite as much light in them as I might have liked, but not at all a disaster, and there were some great landscape shots among them.

Man: Sounds good ...

Woman: Yeah... it's just that when I tried to focus on my little niece, it wasn't that straightforward – someone got in the way, or she moved at the last moment and spoiled the shot.

Man: Oh well, never mind – there'll be other opportunities.

[pause]

tone

[The recording is repeated.]

[pause]

Question 4 You hear part of an interview with a woman who works as a hairdresser in the film industry.

[pause]

tone

Man: Have you had any really memorable experiences on set?

Woman: Sure. Like once, working on a film, the producer came to me saying we needed to match the hair on a bear suit that a stunt man would be wearing in some scenes to the real bear that would be appearing in others. The real bear's hair was lighter than the suit and changing that wasn't an option. We were shooting out on location in bear country an hour away from the nearest town. I had to do a bit of explaining when I called the local beauty supply store to order six large tubs of bleach and a couple of litres of peroxide.

[pause]

[The recording is repeated.]

[pause]

Question 5 You hear part of a podcast about applying to work for an airline.

[pause]

tone

Woman: Despite having zero experience, I took a chance and applied to attend what's called an 'open day' at a big international airline. In effect, this is like a preliminary interview, made to look like an information session. I knew that 'cos I've always fancied the idea of working as cabin crew, so I'd read some blogs online. The invitation came literally the night before – so there was no chance to feel nervous or have second thoughts. I decided to go simply to find out what to expect on such days – so I'd know the next time. I barely slept and was up at dawn making sure I looked the part.

Question 6 You hear two friends talking about the migration of birds.

[pause]

tone

Man: Did you see that programme last night about migrating birds?

Woman: Yes! It's incredible how some species make journeys of thousands of kilometres like that to spend winter somewhere warmer, or summer somewhere cooler. And they only break off to feed and rest.

Man: I know. It'd never crossed my mind that making the journey could actually be quite risky for them.

Woman: Right – it's not like there are nice, safe motorway service stations for them to stop at! Imagine having to keep looking out for unfamiliar predators.

Man: And there are man-made hazards like electricity power lines.

Woman: And poor weather conditions... It sounds like mission impossible – it's amazing they reach their destination at all!

Question 7 You hear a man talking to his friend about training for a marathon.

[pause]

tone

Woman: How's the training going for the marathon event?

Man: I'm starting to wonder whether it's a realistic goal. I'm increasing the length of my runs by a bit each time, but it's taking an age. Whether or not I'll be able to do forty-two kilometres in one go, I'm not sure. I thought it'd be pretty straightforward really.

Woman: Sounds like you're giving yourself a hard time! You should celebrate each time you go further than the day before.

Man: Perhaps – one more kilometre doesn't feel like much of an achievement. I really want to finish the marathon, though. My friend's doing it at a competitive level but I'm certainly not aiming for any prizes!

[pause]

tone

[The recording is repeated.]

[pause]

Question 8 You hear a man telling a friend about his new job.

[pause]

tone

Woman: How's your new job going?

Man: OK, thanks. I mean, I sometimes have to work late, and go in early in the morning for meetings, but that's not every day, and it's what I expected, to be honest. I have a good relationship with my manager – I can't stand working with people who never let you know what they're thinking; it can be exhausting trying to guess what's really on their mind. She's the opposite of that, which suits me. The job's well within my capabilities, too, which is reassuring. It is good to be stretched – and I probably will be eventually, but I'm enjoying the lack of pressure for the time being.

That is the end of Part One.

Now turn to Part Two.

PART 2

You will hear a man called Tim Opie talking about setting up and running a small restaurant. For questions 9 to 18, complete the sentences with a word or short phrase.

You now have forty-five seconds to look at Part Two.

[pause]

tone

Hi, I'm going to tell you about my experience of setting up a small restaurant. I trained as a chef at college and used to dream about running my own restaurant eventually and think about what its name would be. For ages, in my head, it was 'The Hungry House' but in fact I picked 'The Green Garden'. If you haven't already, I hope you'll come and eat with us some day.

My family have helped me a lot along the way, including in those early planning stages, and my brother, who's an artist, gave me great advice when it came to the visual side of things. The logo I produced with him was inspired by his drawings, though I did the menu on my own.

As they say in the restaurant trade, location is everything, and I researched that carefully, of course. There were two good spots in the city centre available to rent at the time: one was beside a company headquarters and the other was right by a music venue. I went for the second of those and I've never regretted that decision.

I had to buy everything to put into the dining area and the kitchen and couldn't get a big loan from the bank. Luckily, a neighbour who's been in the restaurant business for a long time, and who I've known for years, was refurbishing his own place, and let me have several benches for a good price. They're very cool, and more comfortable than chairs! I had to buy brand new tables though, which was expensive.

There were a huge number of decisions and choices to be made about relatively small things, too – but in a restaurant, every detail is important. Take something like plates, for example: there's such a wide range available. I decided I wanted ones with a pattern, like flowers, for example... leaves were what I went for in the end. They're beautiful, I think.

Then, when everything was ready, I had to think about recruiting staff. I knew that for the first year at least, the chef was going to have to be me, and a manager was more than I could afford, but I couldn't start without at least one waiter, even though my family were going to help for the first few months. My first official staff member's still working for me – and he's got a couple of colleagues now!

Before the opening night, I did lots of advertising, particularly on social media, and soon after I'd opened the doors, my little restaurant was full of excited customers. They got discounts in return for filling in questionnaires about the food, which I read anxiously afterwards. In fact, apart from my pancakes, they loved everything ... even my slightly experimental soups. I've adjusted my recipes many times since then, of course.

That was two years ago, and since then I've learned so much! Things go wrong from time to time, it's inevitable, but I now know how to deal with that in a way that makes customers feel well cared for and prevents complaints. On a day-to-day basis, the absolutely key thing for anyone running a restaurant efficiently is to develop ways of cutting right down on waste. I'm proud to say we've done really well on that score.

Test 4 answer key

Some things have surprised me along the way, others not. I knew I'd sometimes need to work late, staying on doing paperwork after the restaurant has closed. I never thought I'd need to wash up with such frequency, though. When people are off sick, that somehow still seems to mostly fall to me!

But it's been brilliant, and I keep on developing my skills. I've enrolled for classes where I'll be shown how to cook tasty food that doesn't contain any dairy products. I'm already pretty good at cooking without wheat products, which is something people appreciate these days. Many of our dishes don't contain meat, either.

Anyway, if you have any questions, ...

That is the end of Part Two.

Now turn to Part Three.

PART 3

You will hear five people talking about a cycle ride they recently went on. For questions 19 to 23, choose from the list (A–H) what each speaker enjoyed most. Use the letters only once. There are three extra letters which you do not need to use.

You now have thirty seconds to look at Part Three.

[pause]

tone

Speaker 1

We'd chosen a fairly gentle route, as neither of us were exactly super-fit. It took us across rolling open farmland, before finally leading us back to the edge of the town through quite a nice park. When we got there, though, it was absolutely full of cyclists, which was a pity, as the route had been completely deserted so far. But we also knew that in the centre of the park there lay an unusual sweetshop that sold wonderful local chocolate, so to treat ourselves after the long ride we'd just done, of course we had to sample some. And it certainly didn't disappoint!

[pause]

tone

Speaker 2

Our route ran through a valley with a river at the bottom, and a convenient cycle track all the way along it. The views were nice enough, but what had motivated us was that we were following in the footsteps of a local poet, who'd been inspired by that whole area long ago to write her best poems. So we were keen to see for ourselves exactly what she'd seen – there'd been very little development around there since then. We were also kind of hoping we'd catch a glimpse of the old steam train that runs along the valley on occasion, but we were out of luck.

[pause]

Speaker 3

We cycled along quite a peaceful route in spring, when the countryside was full of flowers, and other cyclists were waving to us along the way. We were heading for a hundred-year-old stone bridge that had originally taken steam trains across the valley. Now it was reserved for walkers and cyclists only, so we set off across it. It was in poorer condition than we'd expected, though, which was disappointing. Anyway, the highlight for me was then ending up back in the town and its lively main square – so we'd seen places that couldn't have been more different, which was exactly what we'd aimed to do.

[pause]

Speaker 4

Our route included some steep hills initially, which surprised us a bit, and really slowed us down – but we'd decided beforehand we weren't going to push ourselves distance-wise. The route then followed a river, and I was hoping we might spot the wonderful old tourist boat that sets off along it at various times during the day, and even have a trip ourselves – but there was no sign of it. However, we did manage to eat our lunch at probably the prettiest bit of the entire ride – and it made the picnic all the more satisfying. We definitely made the right choice!

[pause]

Test 4 answer key

Speaker 5

The route was chosen to give us incredible views towards the mountains, without too much climbing. We discovered it was a popular cycle route – so much so that we sometimes had to wait for people to pass on the narrow stretches, rather than having it all to ourselves. The trail also led us through an old tunnel – cold and dark, and rather spooky, to be honest. It was hard to see where we were going. We'd have definitely avoided it if we'd realised. But emerging from there felt like a real victory – the best part of the journey. After that, we sat and watched the boats on the nearby river.

That is the end of Part Three.

Now turn to Part Four.

PART 4

You will hear an interview with a woman called Cherry Smithson, who is a fashion photographer. For questions 24 to 30, choose the best answer (A, B or C).

You now have one minute to look at Part Four.

[pause]

tone

Interviewer: Today I'm talking to Cherry Smithson, a professional photographer who specialises in shooting fashion photos for magazines and advertising. Cherry, how would you describe your photographic style?

Cherry: I guess what I like best is working in different settings, with the goal of creating a connection between the model and the surroundings. In my photos, I'm all for switching techniques – anything from drama to simplicity, depending on the location, the clothing I'm photographing and what or who the photo's for.

Interviewer: How did you get into fashion photography?

Cherry: I actually studied engineering at university! Fashion isn't as different from that as you might think, if you consider the engineering that goes into clothing – all the patterns and pieces that have to be put together to fit a form perfectly. Once I'd noticed that, I became intrigued to learn more. I half considered going into fashion design but had an existing love for photography, and suddenly it all fell into place in my mind.

Interviewer: What are the most difficult aspects of fashion photography?

Cherry: Every photographer works closely with a hair and make-up artist, and a stylist ... who puts the outfits together. You've got to make sure everyone's clear about the intended outcome ... you've got to communicate ideas clearly so that you gain the full benefit from each person's skills. That's the biggest challenge, and after that, it would be making a name for yourself – continually adding to your portfolio of work will help with your professional reputation, as will regularly updating your marketing materials.

Interviewer: What is it that particularly appeals to you about fashion photography?

Cherry: They say a picture paints a thousand words and that applies to photographs – it allows you to communicate without speaking a single word, and a photo can have a strong impact on the viewer. That's what's so special about it. The photographer has a bit of input when it comes to the poses, the lighting, and so on – that gives you a sense of freedom. And I like building new relationships with people I meet – not that they affect my artistic decisions.

Interviewer: Do you have a favourite photo that you've taken?

Cherry: Well, I strive to make sure each one is as good as it can be. Saying that, I sometimes notice tiny things I could've made even better, so in a way, I'm never fully satisfied! I guess the one I like best is because of the shoot we did for it. I was on an island in Italy, high up overlooking the sea and there was this beautiful olive tree that suddenly captured my imagination. It was perfect for the model to pose against and the colours were just the right shade to show off the fashions we were showcasing. It all just came together as we wanted. It was a brilliant day in photography terms.

Interviewer: You're working on a blog I believe?

Cherry: Yes, it's one I started for fashion photographers that has interviews with stylists and so on. The goal is to help other photographers get started in the industry, find information about people in this business, make contacts, and so on. From what readers tell me, it's been invaluable to them, which is great because that's the whole point. I often decide what to write about next depending on their requests, which means I don't have to keep thinking up ideas for it – tricky when you're working full time.

Test 4 answer key

Interviewer: Any advice for aspiring fashion photographers?

Cherry: Once you start thinking you're the best, you'll immediately become worse and forget that art's a constant development. Not everyone likes my stuff, and I struggle with that at times, but it's useful to get feedback, even when it's negative. Anyway, when starting out, if you haven't got a project to be getting on with, invent one. You should just keep shooting photos. I'm always experimenting with light and shade, for example, refining how I do things, finding new ways of using light creatively. It keeps your mind – and therefore photos – fresh. Collect fashion photos and look for methods you like – that'll help you find your own unique style.
