

Test 3

READING AND USE OF ENGLISH (1 hour 15 minutes)

Part 1

Questions 1–8

For each question, choose the correct answer.
Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

Sea otters

Sea otters are mammals that inhabit shallow waters off the coasts of North America and Asia. They spend most of their time 1 food, resting and grooming. They are capable of diving to 2 of 45 metres, and can 3 under water for nearly six minutes. They are one of the few mammals to exhibit tool-using behaviour, using rocks, for example, to break open hard shells to get food.

The sea otter's fur is very thick, in fact, it is 4 than all other mammals' fur. Because the creatures have no insulating fat, this fur is important for 5 body temperature, as these social creatures spend much of their time floating on their backs in groups, 6 themselves into formations known as rafts. However, as males often steal food from females, the females tend to stay away from them, forming their own rafts.

Although sea otters are long-lived, 7 an average age of 23 years in the wild, they are 8 on the endangered species list, and conservation is therefore critical.

- | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|-------------|---|-------------|---|-------------|---|-------------|
| 1 | A | looking out | B | finding out | C | seeking out | D | turning out |
| 2 | A | depths | B | lengths | C | distances | D | heights |
| 3 | A | support | B | endure | C | extend | D | remain |
| 4 | A | richer | B | denser | C | tighter | D | broader |
| 5 | A | maintaining | B | protecting | C | directing | D | governing |
| 6 | A | producing | B | arranging | C | displaying | D | creating |
| 7 | A | reaching | B | arriving | C | gaining | D | completing |
| 8 | A | momentarily | B | shortly | C | currently | D | briefly |

Test 3

Part 2

Questions 9–16

For each question, write the correct answer.
Write one word for each gap.
Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS on the separate answer sheet.

Writing a novel

Many people say they would really love to become a writer and write a best-selling novel – even though very 9 of them have ever actually managed to get around to creating one. So 10 do you set about producing your first draft?

One tip that experts often mention is to spend time writing 11 a daily basis, generally for anything 12 ten to fifteen minutes. Remember, though, that the real point of the exercise is 13 seeing what you can achieve in that time, but whether you can commit to the routine. You may find that even though you're so keen to become a writer, it's actually far harder to get started 14 you might expect. And unfortunately, experts are generally in 15 doubt that this is a warning sign. According to them, it suggests that your reluctance to get down to work exceeds your desire to write. So becoming a novelist may not turn 16 to be the dream job for you.

Part 3

Questions 17–24

Read the text below. Use the word given in CAPITALS on the right to form a word that fits in the gap.
Write your answers IN CAPITAL LETTERS on the separate answer sheet.

How archaeologists protect ancient remains

When archaeologists are investigating ancient remains, they don't generally excavate, or dig up, whole buildings. This is because excavation is a destructive process. Instead, they target areas which are 17 to provide the best information about the use and 18 of a building or site.

It's also common for archaeologists to put back the earth they removed once their work is finished. They know that 19 to the sun, and changes in temperature and 20 , can all damage sites which are left open. In 21 , there is a chance that criminals will target the area, hoping to find valuable objects.

Covering up a site means there is a 22 that future archaeologists, who may have more 23 methods and techniques, could gain new information from it. For this reason, coins with current dates are often buried at a site, to 24 easy identification of previously excavated areas.

Keyword List

- 17 LIKE
- 18 SIGNIFICANT
- 19 EXPOSE
- 20 HUMID
- 21 ADD
- 22 POSSIBLE
- 23 EFFECT
- 24 ABLE

Part 4

Questions 25–30

For each question, complete the second sentence so that it means the same as the first, using the word given. Do not change the word given. You must use between two and five words, including the word given.

Write only the missing words IN CAPITAL LETTERS on the separate answer sheet.

25 Whose idea was it to go to the beach?

CAME

Who of going to the beach?

26 Rob wasn't able to speak, as he had been shouting so much at the football match.

LOST

Rob of all the shouting he'd done at the football match.

27 It was too hard to understand the set-up instructions for my new phone.

SENSE

The set-up instructions for my new phone didn't me

28 Kate was the only one who didn't attend the meeting.

APART

Everybody went Kate.

29 Jess doesn't like being woken up early.

PEOPLE

Jess doesn't like it her up early.

30 Aisha broke the glass by accident.

MEAN

Aisha the glass.

Part 5

Questions 31–36

Read an extract from a novel in which a woman is about to start a journey to New York by ship. For each question, choose the correct answer.
Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

The start of a journey

'What on earth have I done?' Violet Hetherington asked herself. She was standing in one of several queues at the dock at Southampton. The queues, by now spilling out of the cattle shed marked 'Departures', to board the Queen Caroline were long. 'It's best to get to the docks late,' her friend Annie had advised. 'If you get there too early, you can grow roots hanging about.' Annie, married to a diplomat and full of advice, was a seasoned traveller. But on this occasion her advice was mistaken.

After a while, an announcement came through the loudspeakers: there had been a 'breakdown in the computer system.' In the face of this setback the atmosphere among the waiting passengers darkened. Violet's own instinct was to turn tail. She felt in her bag for her phone and discovered that it was missing. This was a good deal more annoying than the length of the queues. It confirmed an uneasy sense that the whole idea of a cruise was one of her mistakes. And now there was the nuisance of the phone. She couldn't ring the minicab company to check whether she had left it in the taxi, because that number – along with all her other numbers – was stored in her phone. The very error that her elder son Harry was always counselling her to avoid.

Behind her in the queue stood an approachable-looking couple. 'I'm sorry but, stupidly, I seem to have left my mobile phone behind. I couldn't borrow yours to make one call, could I?' Violet rang Harry on the obliging couple's phone and left a message asking him to ask Kristina, her neighbour, if she would check to see whether the phone had been left behind. If it was not in her flat, she was going to be in trouble, since she had no other means of finding numbers she needed in New York. A large part of her thought, 'Thank goodness.' But she did not confide this to Harry. Harry had come to the view early in life that if not older than his mother, he was a good deal more worldly wise. Daniel, her younger son, was far more sympathetic to her faults, but that was because he shared them. Dan might easily forget to give the message to Kristina at all.

Eventually the queues started to move forward and Violet was ushered towards a window where she handed over her travel documents and prepared to go aboard. Her heart sank further in the ship's foyer, which resembled one of the not-so-grand hotels that have set their sights too high. There were panels of shining fake walnut, extravagant cascades of chandeliers, polished brass plating and carpets patterned in the style commonly found at airports.

Violet followed the signs to the 'Elevators', which were lined floor to ceiling with mirrors and crammed with passengers who, bedraggled from early-morning starts, luggage disposal and the incurable anxiety induced by travel arrangements, might have preferred to be spared the sight of their multiple reflections. Violet was squashed against the side of the lift as it moved upward, stopping at each floor to release a tide of thankful prisoners. But, at last, at the 12th floor, she stepped out to freedom.

And, thank heavens, her room had the balcony she had requested. She had been anxiously rehearsing what to say if it had not. Ignoring Annie's suggestion that she wait for a last-minute deal, she had thrown caution to the winds and paid the highest price she could afford in order to be sure of a view of the sea.

- 31 In the first paragraph, what do we learn about how Violet felt?
- A She regretted arriving late at the port.
 - B She wished she had listened to her friend.
 - C She was glad that she was an experienced traveller.
 - D She was confused about which queue to join.
- 32 In the third paragraph, what are we told about Violet's attitude towards her sons?
- A She wishes she had Harry's organisational skills.
 - B She feels she has a lot in common with Daniel.
 - C She believes that Harry has much to learn about life.
 - D She thinks Daniel has a tendency to ignore her.
- 33 What does 'this' in bold refer to?
- A relief that she wouldn't be able to contact people in New York
 - B frustration at having lost the telephone numbers
 - C fear that her son would be angry with her
 - D uncertainty about where she had left the phone
- 34 In describing the ship's foyer, the writer suggests that Violet felt
- A disbelief that they were actually on a ship.
 - B surprise at the spaciousness of the ship's interior.
 - C nervousness in strange, unfamiliar surroundings.
 - D disappointment at the style of the decoration.
- 35 How did Violet feel about her ride in the lift?
- A grateful for the huge mirrors
 - B impatient with her fellow passengers
 - C relief when it came to an end
 - D irritated that the lift stopped so frequently
- 36 In the final paragraph, what do we learn about Violet?
- A She had been afraid that her room would be unsatisfactory.
 - B She now realised that she had paid far too much for her room.
 - C She was pleased that she had taken Annie's advice about the room.
 - D She wished she had requested a different room.

Part 6

Questions 37–42

Read an article about a writer’s exploration of paths through the countryside. Six sentences have been removed from the text below. For each question, choose the correct answer. There is one extra sentence which you do not need to use.
Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

Exploring a countryside path
by Will Grant

It was when I was writing a novel that my walking habit really began, as a break away from my desk. My lunchtime stroll was through a wood near my village.

The thick woodland was dramatically divided into distinct areas: roughly two-thirds was mature trees and bluebell flowers, whereas the rest contained much younger, recently planted trees, such as pines. While the older trees were full of birds and insects, with the spaces beneath thick with vegetation, the newer trees seemed somehow weirdly, almost threateningly silent. 37 And the same applied to the light, which could differ greatly in quality, depending on where I was.

The ancient path I’d take through the wood wound among the tree trunks and through the layers of the old and new parts of it. One favourite spot was where the path reached a field, and the view opened up almost to the horizon. 38 However, the huge, grey landmark was subsequently demolished, greatly improving the view.

I did that walk many times, in all weathers and in different seasons, and each time, the woodland seemed to change. I came to know its sounds and smells, irrespective of whether the ground was covered in bluebells, summer shade, dry leaves or snow. As a result, I felt I developed a very special relationship with the path. 39 And the path, in turn, entered deep into my head and had a positive effect on my thoughts.

Those walks led me to wonder about the origins of country paths, which was something of a new departure for me as a fiction writer. 40

So I started to research what this path’s history could tell us about the development of human settlements in the area. I traced it back through time by seeking out ancient and modern maps. That slowly revealed a whole hidden story, and something of the experience of our predecessors suddenly came alive. Like many natural paths, it seemed to have been created through frequent use by both humans and grazing animals, trampling the soil and keeping down the vegetation. And regular use had kept it open ever since.

What’s more, over long periods, the path had clearly become a distinct ecosystem, quite different to the surrounding landscape. Walkers, or animals, had evidently dropped or spread seeds from different areas, such as grasses or fruit. 41 In this way, a very particular, flourishing environment had been created. It provided unique and lasting evidence of daily human travel, not designed or constructed but rather representing ‘desire lines’ – the routes that people adopt as being the most convenient.

After some distance, the path descended a dangerously steep hill, passing under a low ‘canopy’, a kind of roof, of ancient trees. 42 Indeed, by forming a wonderful living tunnel, it hid the path completely from the surrounding countryside. That focused my attention entirely on the light ahead, and on other walkers through the centuries who had shared my experience.

My explorations deeply impressed on me how much we need to cherish these important features in the landscape, both for their environmental appeal and their historic worth.

- A Whether kicking up dust in the heat or squelching through mud, my feet always left their mark on it.
- B However, that natural overhead cover created the impression of an inviting secret world.
- C On every single visit, I was struck by this rather troubling contrast.
- D I could well imagine this had once been the key to its appeal.
- E On my earliest trips, the skyline was dominated by the remains of a deserted former factory.
- F These had put down roots, leading to a variety of unusual plants growing along the trail.
- G I'd never previously given much thought to their significance, or even how they were formed.

Part 7

Questions 43–52

Read a magazine article in which four restaurant chefs talk about their work. For each question, choose the correct section. Each section may be chosen more than once.

Mark your answers on the separate answer sheet.

What's it like to be a chef?

A Frank Greenbank

I started as a 16-year-old kitchen assistant. Twenty-five years later, I'm head chef of three top restaurants. I still remember how intense and thrilling everything was at first, and that feeling has never really left me. As I've taken on more responsibility, I've had to learn new skills that are not just about food preparation: finding the right staff, and training, managing and inspiring them to produce new and better dishes. Unless you have an objective to work towards and push yourself, you can't do well. But although I'm demanding, I don't shout or throw things like you see on television cooking programmes. The impression given that it's standard behaviour among chefs is something I find upsetting. In fact, one of the most satisfying aspects of my job is seeing members of my team growing into great chefs. The job requires huge commitment, and if you're not careful, it can destroy your social life and relationships. Luckily, I've largely managed to avoid that happening to me.

B Aaron Mercer

There's an amazing buzz to be got from creating great food, but 90% of it is simply hard work. A 12-hour working day is normal, and something that's never made sense to me is that you're usually expected to carry on even when you're unwell. This is just the way restaurants operate. Like many others in the profession, I'm not at home much because of work, and, as a result, I'm not as close to my kids as I should be – and I feel guilty about this. On various occasions I've been on the point of quitting and trying something else. I've kept at it, though, and I'm just about to fulfil a lifelong ambition – to open my own restaurant. There are challenges involved, but I can't wait to get started.

C John Po

I worked in finance for several years, but I wanted something different, so I started selling home-made food from a market stall. It was a struggle at first and I wondered if I'd been foolish to leave a secure, well-paid job. But I kept going and I now own two successful restaurants. I employ about 30 people, but I'm still very involved in the day-to-day food preparation. What I love most is the busy period when the team is working at full speed and dinners are flying out – the adrenaline rush is awesome. I do get concerned, though, that when you're so involved, you can lose sight of things happening elsewhere. Consumers want new things and other chefs emerge who do things differently. It's important to know what's going on. My view is if you're not constantly trying new things, you're not pushing yourself to improve. You might well get things wrong and this can be costly, but you can learn from mistakes, and this approach has worked well for me.

D Javier Sánchez

Great chefs seen on TV are regarded as role models, and as a result there's no shortage of young people wanting to become chefs themselves. There are positive sides to this, but I've noticed a tendency among younger people to believe that fame and fortune will come overnight, and when it doesn't, they feel let down. When young chefs come to work in my kitchen, I tell them that a great restaurant menu is not shaped by members of the public who eat there, but by the creativity and expertise of those who prepare the food. But this expertise comes from accepting a lengthy process of gradually building up knowledge and skills. It involves working inhumane hours for very little reward, intensive study, not taking time off when you don't feel well, and being obsessive about the work. There are no shortcuts.

Which chef

is pleased to have taken risks at times in his career?	43
is critical of attitudes towards sickness in some restaurants?	44
takes pride in the achievements of people working with him?	45
believes that chefs rather than customers should decide what food is served?	46
admits that he almost changed careers in the past?	47
mentions the excitement he experiences at a particular time of day?	48
emphasises how important it is to have patience as a trainee?	49
worries about not keeping up to date with the developments in cooking?	50
explains why restaurant work being fashionable may cause problems?	51
emphasises the importance of setting goals?	52

Test 3

WRITING (1 hour 20 minutes)

Part 1

Question 1

You must answer this question.
Write your answer in 140–190 words in an appropriate style on the separate answer sheet.

- 1 In your English class you have been talking about different types of free-time activities. Now, your English teacher has asked you to write an essay.

Write your essay using all the notes and giving reasons for your point of view.

'Watching films is better than reading books.' Do you agree?

Notes

Write about:

- sharing the experience with others
- amount of time available
- (your own idea)

Part 2

Questions 2–4

Write an answer to one of the questions in this part.
Write your answer in 140–190 words in an appropriate style on the separate answer sheet.
Put the question number in the box at the top of the answer sheet.

2 You see this announcement on an English-language sports website:

Reviews wanted

A sports event

Have you been to watch a sports event in your area?

Tell us which sport you saw, describe the venue and say how well organised the event was.
Would you attend a similar event again?

The best reviews will be posted on our website.

Write your review.

3 Your English teacher has asked you to write a report about the new canteen at the international college you attend.

You should include information about:

- the venue and the food available
- how popular the new canteen is with students
- what could be improved about the new canteen.

Write your report.

4 You see this announcement on an English-language website:

Articles wanted

Life today

There are many developments in the modern world – for example, transport and technology.
What do you think is the most useful development, and how does it improve people’s lives?
Do you think there are any other developments that may be useful for the future?

The best articles will be posted on our website.

Write your article.

Test 3

LISTENING (approximately 40 minutes)

Part 1

Questions 1–8

For each question, choose the correct answer.

- 1 You hear a woman telling a friend about her decision to give up gymnastics.
She decided to give up gymnastics because she

 - A felt that it took up too much of her time.
 - B was worried about making an injury worse.
 - C realised she had lost interest in it.

- 2 You hear a man talking about giving presentations at work.
What does he believe is most important?

 - A to focus on appearing confident
 - B to always be well prepared
 - C to seek advice from colleagues

- 3 You hear a woman on a podcast reviewing a book about tennis.
What is she doing?

 - A suggesting the type of reader the book would interest
 - B questioning the whole idea behind the book
 - C analysing the reasons why the book will be popular

- 4 You hear two friends talking about a new method for dealing with pollution in lakes.
They're both concerned that it might

 - A cause other problems elsewhere.
 - B affect specific types of wildlife.
 - C lead to irresponsible behaviour.

- 5 You hear two friends talking about a strategy for dealing with false information online. How do they both feel about this?
- A surprised that it hasn't been put into place earlier
 - B hopeful that it will succeed on a large scale
 - C eager to observe how it will work in practice
- 6 You hear a journalist being interviewed about tackling difficult tasks. What does she recommend?
- A focusing on the reasons why you should do them
 - B finding out what is preventing you from doing them
 - C facing up to the fact that you may dislike doing them
- 7 You hear two friends talking about outdoor swimming in cold water. What do they agree about it?
- A It takes time for swimmers' bodies to adapt to it.
 - B Swimmers can gain a variety of benefits from it.
 - C Older swimmers should be encouraged to take it up.
- 8 You hear a woman talking on a local radio station about classical music. What is she doing?
- A promoting a series of concerts
 - B reviewing the biography of a performer
 - C introducing a programme about an orchestra

Part 2

Questions 9–18

You will hear a student called Dan giving a presentation to his class about a kind of government survey called a census. For each question, write the correct answer. Write a word or short phrase.

Government censuses

Dan says that census questions are often about jobs, 9 and age.

Dan was interested to learn that in the 17th century, the word census meant 10 ' ' in English.

Dan hadn't realised that some sections of a census can be 11 to complete.

The 12 of censuses is different in different countries, and the topics asked about are, too.

Dan learnt that people's 13 was the subject of data collection in many early censuses.

Until recently, people would receive census paperwork by 14 and complete it themselves.

Local governments may spend money on 15 or education if the census shows a rising birth rate in a particular area.

Dan likes the idea that groups such as 16 are able to access census information for research.

Dan is interested in creating a 17 using census data from the past.

Dan thinks the most amusing job title that appeared in the 1921 UK census was 18 ' '.

Part 3

Questions 19–23

You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about their experiences of learning to draw. What does each speaker say about their experience?
For each question, choose the correct answer.
Use each answer only once. There are three extra answers which you do not need to use.

- Speaker 1 19

Speaker 2 20

Speaker 3 21

Speaker 4 22

Speaker 5 23
- A I was initially put off by my lack of talent.

B I learnt the value of repeatedly correcting my mistakes.

C I found drawing a variety of objects helped my development.

D I felt encouraged after looking back at my early work.

E I struggled to find the motivation to practise.

F I realised the range of approaches is very wide.

G I believed only the best equipment could produce good results.

H I was reluctant to study drawing theory.

Part 4

Questions 24–30

You will hear an interview with a man called Callum Hartley, who produces food videos and cookbooks for young adults. For each question, choose the correct answer.

Listening test audio

- 24 When Callum talked to other students about cooking, he was surprised at how
- A little confidence they had in their own abilities.
 - B limited their access to practical advice was.
 - C unwilling they were to try new dishes.
- 25 Callum started his business soon after graduating because he
- A wanted to take up an opportunity he'd been offered.
 - B felt that he was unprepared for anything else.
 - C was eager to fulfil a long-term ambition.
- 26 Callum suggests the initial mistake he made with his business was that he
- A wasn't adventurous enough in the approach he took.
 - B didn't give it the level of commitment that was needed.
 - C didn't stick to some basic principles he had established.
- 27 Callum thinks the key factor in the popularity of his Eat to the Beat videos was the
- A extensive research that he had carried out.
 - B relationship he had with another organisation.
 - C understanding he had of his target audience.
- 28 What impressed Callum about some existing cookbooks for young adults?
- A the visual appeal they seemed to have
 - B the clear instructions that they provided
 - C the commercial success associated with them

- 29 The part of his Greener Meals campaign that Callum feels proudest of is the focus on
- A dealing with food waste.
 - B buying local ingredients.
 - C cutting down on packaging.
- 30 Following the launch of some new products by his company, Callum is
- A annoyed about the way some people have reacted to them.
 - B unsure whether there is enough genuine demand for them.
 - C concerned that some competitors may try to copy them.